Music, loss and healing

Do you remember the last time you cried in public? For me, it often happens in my car while listening to KEXP, a Seattle public radio station dedicated to building a "compassionate world" through music. KEXP's morning show DJ, John Richards, hosts special "Music Heals" shows where listeners call in, requesting songs that have aided their healing. As Richards notes, "I hear from listeners every day about a song or a lyric that helped them heal, process, grieve or just find the strength to go on." These shows always move me to tears.

On Sunday, August 3, the 9th of the Hebrew month Av, we observe Tishah B'Av, our Jewish communal memorial day. This day marks historical tragedies, from the destruction of the First Temple in 586 BCE to modern times. Like KEXP's healing shows, Tishah B'Av music helps the Jewish community "heal, process, grieve, and just find the strength to go on." The biblical Book of Lamentations, detailing the First Temple's destruction, is chanted to a haunting melody. Since the Middle Ages, new songs, kinot, have been composed to memorialize contemporary Jewish tragedies, from medieval expulsions to the Holocaust, and most recently, the October 7, 2023, terrorist attack.

The last time I cried in public, it wasn't in my car, but it was still evoked by music. In April, I attended a live screening of a joint memorial service for Israelis and Palestinians who died in the ongoing conflict. This service, sponsored by the Parents Circle, represents over 800 bereaved Palestinian and Israeli families working to "transform their pain into a force for reconciliation, dialogue and peace." For security, the private event was held at undisclosed locations in Tel Aviv and Ramallah, with 15,000 people livestreaming worldwide and watch parties across Israel and the West Bank.

My livestream experience took place in a sterile meeting room in a Palestinian neighborhood in Jerusalem. The initial mood among the mixed group of Israelis, Palestinians and foreigners was stiff. However, the energy shifted dramatically when a Jewish-Israeli and a Palestinian-Israeli began singing a simple lullaby together in Hebrew and Arabic. Many in the room, including myself, were overcome with emotion and began to cry.

While the Parents Circle's memorial cannot end the war, for a few minutes, the music offered a shared space for Israelis, Palestinians and global onlookers to cope with grief, loss and trauma. Tishah B'Av is our Jewish community's time to memorialize our unique history. Yet it's vital to remember that while Jewish people have endured many tragedies, we don't have a monopoly on pain. As my favorite radio station reminds me, both music and loss are universal. Regardless of our backgrounds, we can all use music as a tool for healing.

Important communication note

Since I've been away, we have started using a new phone system at TBO. I now have remote access to a dedicated TBO line, and will phase out using my personal cell phone for TBO communications. Please call and text message me on my direct TBO line: 425-551-7624. Thank you, Rabbi Kort

From our President

She's baaaack!

On Saturday, July 19, we enjoyed our first in-person Shabbat service led by Rabbi Kort since her return from her Sabbatical in Jerusalem. Shoshana Stombaugh was our music leader and the outdoor venue was Langus Riverfront Park in Everett. The service was well attended by adults and so many children! The bimah was on the grass, and where you would expect to see the ark and the Torah, instead we saw purple and yellow flowers, greenery, a slowly flowing river and even a kayak. We turned our backs to the river as we faced east for the Sh'ma. The air was a little chilly (for me) but the ruach was warm, as it always is at TBO events. Although we were still out of our physical space as TBO undergoes its remodel, it felt good to be together again with our TBO family outdoors on this beautiful day.

Two points stayed with me from Rabbi Kort's d'rash. The first was based on a classical midrash, as reinterpreted by Lawrence Kushner, in which Reuben and Shimon kvetch about having left Egypt but not feeling an immediate improvement in their lives. Rabbi explained that at the sea, they were stuck in the mud, not raising their eyes to see the freedom that lay ahead. The moral of the story, I think, was that even in difficult times, we must fight the tendency to focus on the mud and instead raise our heads and our spirits to see what is good around us. The second point that struck me was Rabbi's comment that on Shabbat we "pretend" that all is right with the world. I love that. We aren't saying that we are living in the best times in the best possible world - we all know that we aren't - but for just a little while we can pretend and give ourselves a "time out." Isn't that what Shabbat is about?

I am so happy to have Rabbi Kort's thoughtfulness and wisdom back with us.

Some history about the Union for Reform Judaism

Temple Beth Or is one of more than 860 Reform Jewish congregations, representing a million people, that are affiliated with the URJ in North America.

The first Reform Jewish temple opened in Seesen Germany on July 17, 1820. Under the leadership of Rabbi Abraham Geiger, changes that he thought would make it easier for Jews to live Jewishly within modern society included the use of German instead of Hebrew for prayer, mixed gender seating, one-day observance of holidays, and the participation of a cantor and choir.

When German reformers immigrated to America, they brought Reform Judaism with them. The first American Reform Jewish religious group was the Reformed Society of Israelites, organized in 1824 in Charleston, South Carolina. Charleston's Congregation Beth Elohim, a Sephardic Orthodox synagogue, became the first permanent Reform Jewish synagogue in the U.S. Interestingly, I prepared a student for bat mitzvah there, and at least one of our TBO families visited the beautiful synagogue this summer. You can sign up for a guided tour if you are in the area.

Twenty years after Beth Elohim was founded, Isaac Mayer Wise, an organizer of the American Jewish Reform movement, came to the U.S. from Bohemia. Rabbi Wise wrote Minhag America (American Practice) in 1857. It was the first siddur specifically edited for American worshippers and included both the Hebrew text and English translations.

In 2003, delegates to the Minnesota Biennial Convention of the Reform movement approved a name change from Union of American Hebrew Congregations (UAHC) to Union for Reform Judaism (URJ).

I was intrigued to learn that while the Reform movement's position on Israel and Zionism has changed over the years, it has never wavered from a liberal position on social issues. Today, the RAC, the Religious Action Center of the URJ, has consistently taken liberal positions and organized actions that many of us have taken part in.

I invite you to explore the history of the Reform movement in America. Visit URJ.org/who-we-are/history.

Exploring Diaspora Jewish identity through the music of Tishah B'Av with Rabbi Kort Sunday, August 3, 10:00-11:30 am
Private home, Mukilteo - address provided upon registration.

During this 90-minute interactive class, we will study and listen to a selection of music for Tishah B'Av written over 2,000 years. Through these songs, we will explore our own complex relationship with the land of Israel as Jews living in the Diaspora.

Music is the ritual centerpiece of Tishah B'Av, which commemorates the destruction of both ancient Temples in Jerusalem and has come to be a day to remember many tragedies that have befallen the Jewish people throughout history. The relationship between Jews in the Diaspora and the land of Israel is a central theme in many of the liturgical dirges composed for the holiday.

Tishah B'Av is a traditional fast day; no food will be served. Registration closes Friday, August 1, noon. Members only. Register at tinyurl.com/templebethortba.

Colin Lowery is becoming bar mitzvah

Colin Lowery, son of Ken and Mila Lowery and brother of Laila, will be called to the Torah on August 23, 2025. Colin is an eighth grader at Heatherwood Middle School, where his favorite subjects are Art and PE. He enjoys playing sports (lacrosse, soccer and basketball), fishing, reading, and playing the cello.

Colin's favorite Temple activity is celebrating Rosh Hashanah at Camp Kalsman. Studying for his bar mitzvah has taught him that with the right support, he is a fast learner.

For his tikkun olam project, Colin organized a beach cleanup at Brackett's Landing Park in Edmonds and served meals for the homeless at a community kitchen in Snohomish.

Colin would like to thank his Religious School teachers Roland Roth and Jessica Hill, his b'nei mitzvah tutor Pam Spitzer, Rabbi Kort, and his family for their support throughout this process.

The detention vault is done and foundation construction is underway

Here's what's happening on Lombard Avenue:

- The stormwater detention vault has been completed and covered with soil.
- Excavation for the foundation of the building extension is completed, and construction is underway.
- Initial demolition at the front of the building revealed that the foyer and office did not have a foundation under them. The architect has submitted plans to the city to fix this problem. CPM anticipates that addressing this situation will result in added cost and a delay in the project of about seven weeks.
- Church Mutual has agreed to settle our insurance claim now for the fire that destroyed the adjacent duplex, rather than waiting for the Temple addition to be completed.
- The interior design team is evaluating paint colors, flooring, cabinetry for the kitchen, and appliances. They will invite members of the Religious School to participate in choosing paint colors for the classrooms.

You can follow the progress on our website at templebethor.org/building. Check it out to see more photos!

What is LIFE & LEGACY?

LIFE & LEGACY® is a partnership program which helps communities such as TBO build endowments to provide long-term stability and support to sustain Jewish life. LIFE & LEGACY encourages individuals to plan for after-lifetime giving. Periodically, we'll answer some questions about LIFE & LEGACY.

Do I need a will? I don't have one.

In general, everyone over 18 should have a will. This is especially important if you have minor children. For LIFE & LEGACY purposes, a will is not necessary. Most bank accounts, IRAs, investment accounts, life insurance policies and similar assets provide an option to name beneficiaries using percentages.

Do I have to promise to give money right now?

LIFE & LEGACY asks that you make a commitment now for the future. You don't have to specify a specific amount; you are just saying you will include TBO in your planning. What you choose to give is private and totally up to you.

I don't have any family, so I don't need to think about gift and estate planning.

If you have no heirs and you don't have a documented will or estate plan in place, there is a very good likelihood the state will become your de facto beneficiary. Few people like to think about their own death, yet it is important to review your assets and update your beneficiary plans throughout your lifetime.

Will asking for legacy gifts hurt our Capital Campaign?

There is no conflict between the two programs. The Capital Campaign is a drive to raise funds in a short time frame for the specific effort to update and improve our building and its accessibility. A LIFE & LEGACY gift is a pledge for the future, there is no due date, and for that reason, does not compete with the Capital Campaign's goals.

This is meant for major donors, right?

The benefit of LIFE & LEGACY is that we each have the opportunity to participate in our own way, in our own capacity, with an eye on the future. We do not need to be wealthy, we do not need to commit to hard dollars, and we do not need to struggle to find extra funds in our budget today.

Leadership news

During the Governing Board meeting on June 29, 2025, the Board did the following:

- Remodel Task Force Update Bob Goodmark reported that the existing front of the building is on rotting wooden piers, not concrete slab per the current code. Fixing this is an unexpected change in scope, which will require additional time and cost.
- Capital Campaign Update Jeff Napp mentioned that co-chair Jess Burgamy is stepping down, so they are recruiting for a new co-chair. The Campaign is still working on our last goal to raise $300,000.
- James Feinberg provided the monthy report from the Finance Committee.
- Rabbi Kort Sabbatical return. Membership committee requested help making calls to encourage congregation to turn out for Rabbi's first Shabbat back on July 18. Governing Board agreed to help.
- Coverage during Nancy's absence July 2-9. Wanda Bresnick would cover in her absence, and Jeff would cover if Wanda wasn't available.

Temple Beth Or Mission Statement

Temple Beth Or is a warm, compassionate, vibrant, spirited, inclusive, and participatory Reform Jewish community.

We are religiously and geographically diverse, serving the northern Puget Sound region of Washington State. As God's covenantal partners in fulfilling mitzvot, our priorities are:

- K'hilah (community)/mishpachah (family) nurturing our interactive, multigenerational extended family;
- Torah lifelong learning, searching for meaning, and seeking comfort and healing;
- Avodah worship and celebration through the observance of meaningful, creative, and traditional rituals;
- Tikkun olam transforming ourselves and our world through tzedakah (fairness), social justice, and g'milut chasadim (acts of loving kindness).
